Abstract

A method is described that involves correlating a stream of received samples with a correlation word. The stream has one of a plurality of different possible received sampling pattern phases. The correlation word corresponds to a sampling of looked-for symbols where the sampling of looked for symbols has a sampling pattern constructed with different components. Each of the components represents one of the different possible received sampling pattern phases.